DIVING INTO THE WATERS OF THE SORRAIA RIVER IS TO DISCOVER A SPACE OF NATURE AND LEISURE
IN THE HEART OF RIBATEJO

Coruche

Wherever you look, the colours of the montado, the agricultural fields, and the river are always present, like a watercolour where golden, green, and blue tones stand out. With a Mediterranean climate, marked by the scents of wildflowers and the sounds of birds in the tilled plains.

A walk through the streets of the towns and villages of the municipality is the best way to get to know Coruche, or to lose yourself in the vast montado areas of cork oak and pine trees, framed by the agricultural plains of the Sorraia River valley. After enjoying the charms of the landscape, indulge in the scents and flavours of traditional Ribatejan cuisine. The menu features wild bull and veal meat, river fish, rice, pine nuts, and other local products.

Visiting Coruche means visiting one of the most inspiring regions of Portugal. Among places of great ecological interest, rich in biodiversity, walk through centuries of tradition. Discover the craftsmanship created by local artisans, which is expressed in basketry, textiles, and works with cork and clay. The built heritage is another highlight. The architecture of the houses, churches, the Museum, the museum centres, and the Cork and Cork Oak Observatory reveals glimpses of the coruchense soul and contributes to the uniqueness of this destination. Outdoor sports are also highly recommended. Here, you'll find exceptional conditions for cycling (MTB, gravel, road), hiking, trail running, canoeing, sport fishing, and many other activities.

CUARIOSITIES:

This is a land of many owls. Legend has it that the first King of Portugal, while passing through this territory, said: "From this day forward, it shall be called Coruche."

The oldest bell in Portugal, dating back to the 13th century, was found in Coruche and can be visited at the Coruche Municipal Museum.

The southern entrance to the municipality's main town is made through seven bridges in just 3 km, offering a unique experience of colours ranging from yellow to dark red across the Sorraia River.

Coruche is the World's Capital of Cork. Nearly 10% of the national cork is harvested in the municipality. The manufacturing units in Coruche produce around 6 million cork stoppers per day, which are exported worldwide. The Cork and Cork Oak Observatory is a unique building, the only one of its kind in the country, covered with cork on the exterior and in the interior of the auditorium as a tribute to the cork oak.

Heritage

History of Coruche

Coruche is the seat of one of the largest municipalities in Portugal,

covering an area of 1,115.72 km<sup>2</sup> and with approximately 17,350 inhabitants, subdivided into eight parishes. The municipality is bordered to the north by the municipalities of Almeirim and Chamusca, to the northeast by Ponte de Sor, to the east by Mora, to the southeast by Arraiolos, to the south by Montemor-o-Novo and the secondary territory of Montijo, to the west by Benavente, and to the northwest by Salvaterra de Magos.

Rich in natural resources, the Sorraia River valley has been inhabited since the Palaeolithic period, although the most continuous archaeological records are only known from the Neolithic era, with the dawn of agriculture and the sedentarisation of ancient farming societies.

Roughly dating back to the 4th and 3rd millennia B.C., the megalithic complex of Coruche is located in the extreme southeast of the municipality and consists of around three dozen monuments, which were excavated in the 1930s. The objects found in these structures are associated with the cult of the dead in ancient farming societies.

The Romans also left their mark on the Sorraia Valley, suggesting a concentrated settlement along the river and an intense rural occupation between the 1st and 5th centuries A.D. As a prime communication route, the river's navigability enabled the trade and transport of goods between regions. In fact, the cargo capacity provided by Roman ships ensured lower costs and faster transport, making a large part of the agricultural products that could not be sold overland profitable.

The construction of a fortification on the hill overlooking the village of Coruche may date back to the period of Moorish rule, but its location certainly assumed particular strategic importance during the long process of the Christian Reconquest. Coruche's geographical position, between the cities of Santarém, Lisbon, and Évora, provided a privileged observation post to control the vast territory extending to the south.

D. Afonso Henriques conquered the castle of Coruche in 1166, and in 1176 it was entrusted for maintenance to the Military Order of Freires of Évora, or the Military Order of São Bento. The first charter of the village of Coruche was granted to D. Afonso Henriques on May 26th, 1182, following the model of Évora's charter, confirmed by D. Sancho I in 1189 and by D. Afonso II in 1218. This charter remained in effect until D. Manuel I, who reformed the charters in the 16th century.

Nossa Senhora do Castelo Church Coruche

This Marian sanctuary owes its name to the oppidum that once existed here, which held considerable strategic importance during the process of the Christian Reconquest. Legend has it that it was founded by the will of D. Afonso Henriques, in gratitude to Our Lady, after the conquest of the castle from the Moors, and this is the reason for the oil portrait placed on the pulpit wall. On the main altar, the image of Nossa Senhora do Castelo, Patroness of the town, stands with the Child at her side.

São Mateus Church - Erra

The foundation of the Misericórdia of Coruche took place in the second half of the 16th century. The construction of the church began in 1565 and was completed in 1584. The current façade and interior changes are the result of a significant series of works that began in the second half of the 17th century. Generally speaking, the original mannerist structure has been preserved, but the vaulting and ornamentation are already in the Rococo style, making it a Monument of Public Interest.

São Mateus Church - Erra

The church of the former Mercy of Erra, dated 1691 and engraved on the closing arch of the transept, assumed the role of parish headquarters when the old 16th-century main church could no longer be used. Almost the entire collection of liturgical implements was then moved to the current temple, including the sculpture of the patron saint, São Mateus, and the notable holy water font known as 'Erra Velha.' The interior, with its single nave, features the classic side choir typical of Misericórdias.

São João Batista Church Coruche

The mother church, inaugurated in 1958, is a project by architect Vasco de Morais Palmeiro. It features a modern and austere design, entirely white and filled with light. The church has two tall bell towers, needle-shaped with a quadrangular base. Crowning the main portico is a sculptural ensemble depicting São João Batista. The main altar showcases an Indo-Portuguese tabernacle and a statue of the Crucified Christ. The use of reddish-pink marble creates a dignified atmosphere for prayer.

Santo António Church - Coruche

It is a temple with a single nave, facing south, featuring a simple crossing arch and a chancel with a vaulted ceiling. Its location, above Largo de Santo António, marks the beginning of Rua Direita, which would have been the western entrance to the medieval village. It most likely succeeded the São Miguel Church, documented from 1222. In the 17th century, the prince of archangels was replaced as the patron saint by Santo António. The interior tilework dates back to the 17th century.

Santa Ana Church - Santana do Mato

Built in the 16th century, the church of Santana do Mato became a vast rural parish of a scattered habitat, and was built in honour of Santa Ana, who is said to have appeared here, among dense oak trees, in the middle of the woods. Already in the middle of the 17th century, this modest temple was enhanced by a tile covering of exceptional richness, preserving the popular manueline architecture characteristics. Located in the churchyard there is a 17th century crucifix.

Santa Justa Church - Couço

The Santa Justa Church, with its privileged position overlooking the Serraia Valley, is a rural temple of simple character, featuring a modest baptistery topped with a domed roof. It may have been built on the site of a former pagan sanctuary, suggested by the presence of a Roman inscription on the votive altar found here, possibly dedicated to Carneu Calanticense, an indigenous deity who protected flocks and shepherds, and whose main cult centre was located in Santana do Campo, Arraiolos.

São José da Lamarosa Church Lamarosa

It is a simple, single-nave temple, with a tombstone above the main façade door referencing the proclamation of the Dogma da Conceição. It has a main altar and two side altars, both lacking an altarpiece, with the fronts of all three altars adorned with 17th-century tiles featuring blue and yellow ornaments on a white background. On the main altar stands the image of Jesus Christ on the Cross, with a gilded metal tabernacle at His feet.

São Pedro Church - Coruche

This church appears in historical records from 1222. However, despite its mediaeval origins, which are associated with the 1287 bell, the current structure has undergone significant modifications, the most recent of which dates to the 17th century, unlike the 19th-century bell tower in the churchyard. The interior is entirely covered with 17th-century patterned tiles. In the chancel, which has a vaulted ceiling, the altar frontal stands out, portraying the Garden of Paradise, with a central medallion featuring the image of São Pedro.

Nossa Senhora do Rosário Monastery Couço

The Nossa Senhora do Rosário Monastery is part of the Belém Monastic Family, dedicated to the Assumption of the Virgin and São Bruno, and is home to the respective Portuguese community. It offers welcoming spaces for groups or individuals who wish to learn about and participate in the prayer life of the Monjas, in a spirit of retreat and listening to God's Word.

Pillory - Coruche

Symbol of power and municipal autonomy, the Manueline Pillory of Coruche was originally located next to the Town Hall, on the west side of the current Praça da Liberdade. It was dismantled prior to February 1908. The current pillory, dating from the 1940s, is a typical example of Gothic Manueline revivalism, which is based on original fragments. The capital is adorned with the armillary sphere, the Cross of Avis, the coat of arms, and the village's insignia.

Sorraia River

The Sorraia River is formed at the confluence of the Sor and Raia rivers. It flows through the entire municipality of Coruche from east to west, creating a natural line that divides it in two. A source of life, the river has been fundamental to the settlement of early human populations in the region and remained the primary means of communication until the early 20th century. In Coruche, the riverside area invites visitors to engage in sporting activities, such as sport fishing, as well as recreational and leisure pursuits, all set in a privileged landscape where urban and natural elements coexist in healthy harmony.

Metal bridges in Coruche

The southern entrance to the village of Coruche is through seven bridges over just 3 km, in a unique experience of colour between the yellow and dark red that altogether create one of the iconic images of the municipality's main town. The largest, the General Teófilo da Trindade Bridge, comprises three independent spans, each 40 metres in length, constructed of metal. The first two were built in 1930, while the third span, constructed in 1980, replaced the previous deck that had collapsed the year before.

Sorraia Valley Irrigation Work

The Sorraia Valley Irrigation Works concluded in 1959, enables the use of storage water on the Maranhão and Montargil dam and the respective distribution through pumping stations and irrigation canals. It represents the most significant transformation in agricultural exploitation of the valley. Rainfed crops took a backseat, with irrigated crops being exploited since then, where corn, rice and tomatoes predominate. Between the months of April and September, rice and corn fields can be visited throughout the municipality, offering good conditions for observing the landscapes and fauna associated with this type of cultivation.

Sorraia Pedestrian Bridge Dam

One of the main objectives of the dam is to maximise the maintenance of a water level along the banks of the Sorraia River, ensuring conditions for fish migration by incorporating a passage device (fish ladder). Visits to the fish ladder require prior booking via: +351 243619072 / turismo@cm-coruche.pt.

The Montado (oak grove) is a remarkable example of renewal and sustainable exploitation, making Coruche even more special, proudly claiming the title of “World Cork Capital”. Around 50% of the municipality is covered by forest, consisting of a mixed montado of cork oak and stone pine, renowned both for the quality and economic value of the products it generates—wood, cork, and pine nuts—and for its rich biodiversity of fauna and flora. Today, the cork-growing communities and their landscapes form a unique mosaic of great natural and anthropological richness, offering a magnificent setting for vacation and leisure activities. # Wines

The wines with a strong colour and flavour are also a mark of the region. Young and aromatic red wines predominate, but fresh whites, very fruity and with tropical aromas, are also an example of quality. The south-Mediterranean climate and the fact that they are produced using a wide variety of grape varieties, such as Touriga Nacional, Trincadeira Preta, Fernão Pires, Chardonnay, or Cabernet Sauvignon, make the wines produced in the region special.
